What: Safety In The Age Of Automation

Who: Mark Letman, Safety & Wellbeing Business Lead, Pacific Brands.

Details: Mark Letman will provide an insight into what automation can mean for safety procedures and related workplace arrangements, when he talks about major changes at Pacific Brands giant national warehouse in Truganina.

The warehouse has recently automated some of the key procedures for picking and packing orders for consumer products that include the Bonds underwear and Sheridan sheets brands.

Mark's experience is that the move to automation has had some positive effects on working conditions.

"The automation's taken away a lot of the hard slog and legwork in the warehouse, and it's become a joint activity between employees and the machine," he says.

But it has also brought challenges in introducing employees to new work practices. This includes safety requirements when working with machines for the first time.
